I've had my 3-el SteppIR up for about seven years. It's been a marvelous antenna for me.

A local ham friend and I assembled the antenna without difficulty. As I recall, it took us several hours but not an entire day.

I'll not forget the first time I switched from my previous dipole to the SteppIR. It was as if a door to the world had been opened.

The antenna has been trouble-free except for a needed paint job on the elements after about four years in the southern Mississippi sun.

I did blow a couple of controller chips over the years but each time it was due to my own carelessness. The replacement chips were easily obtained and installed.

I've told my ham friends that if the antenna ever totally failed or was destroyed, I would immediately replace it with another SteppIR.
